

Sprint Retrospective - Sprint One - CSCC01 Group One

What Went Well?

When discussing the results of the first sprint with the team, we identified a few key areas we had performed strongly. The first of these is our communication and collaboration skills. We felt that throughout the sprint process, by sticking to our schedule and keeping lines of communication open we were able to tackle issues that arose early and effectively, saving ourselves headaches down the road. In a similar vein to this, we did a good job of sharing resources as well. There were multiple times throughout the sprint when we were able to point another member of the team in the right direction on an issue they were facing, sharing a helpful link or tutorial to set them on the right path.

Throughout the sprint, our group also demonstrated resilience in handling unexpected challenges or minor inconveniences, particularly schedule changes. Important events like midterm evaluations or course schedule were brought up multiple times as obstacles in scheduling group meetings for the sprint, but clear communication resulted in an evolving schedule that was frequently adjusted. This adaptability allowed us to regularly update others within the group, maintaining a collaborative and positive atmosphere.

What Didn't Go Well?

- Time management
- Task Weighting
- Scheduling?

One of the main areas that didn't go well was our time management and keeping up to pace with development. This was mainly due to midterms and other assignments taking up lots of time. We discussed that the best thing to do is to get more work done near the start of the sprint to avoid work piling up near the end.

What Did We Learn?

- Spend more time initially to save time later
- Weight more pessimistically in case something goes wrong
- Continue to keep communication open, and schedule meetings with individual members, dont just wait for sprints.
